If the LCD provides a Vee (negative voltage) output pin, just only a pot is required to adjust the voltage.

If LCD doesn’t come with an internal DC converter, you have to build it by yourself.

Using a MAX759 is the easiest and most flexible solution.

(*) graphical LCDs mostly require a negative voltage to drive the Liquid crystal cells